

“You offered to help,” Isi said. “Would you watch the boys until I find a replacement sitter?”

Babysit? Him? “I don’t think that’s a good idea.”

“It would be for two or three days at the most.”

“But I don’t know anything about kids.”

She ignored his protests. “I’d need you to drop them off at preschool and bring them back here afterward.”

“I’m sure—” Conway glanced at the boys “—they’d rather have anyone but me watch them.”

“Oh, never mind.” Her shoulders sagged.

Hell. How hard could it be to watch a couple of four-year-olds? For two years Isi had listened to him bellyache about women. He couldn’t turn his back on her when she needed him most.

“Okay, I’ll watch the boys,” he said.

She flashed him a bright smile. “You’ll need to be here by noon on Monday.”

“See you then.” Conway couldn’t escape fast enough.
