Summary : Free perceptions of preparedness and practices a survey of teachers of english language learners pdf download - mainstream teachers who obtained their english as a second language esl certification by exam only are faced with increasing numbers of english language learners ell's in their classrooms decreasing standards for teacher esl certification and increasing accountability for ell's has made teachers role in effectively increasing the language and academic skills of ell's an area of major concern this study used a survey and focus group interviews to obtain information regarding esl-certified fourth- and fifth-grade teachers perceived preparedness practices and resources needs related to meeting the academic and language needs of ell's in general education classrooms the results indicated that teachers reported differences in their perceived preparedness based on years teaching experience years of esl certification professional development hours and university esl courses but not on certification route the results also showed that teachers reported differences in their sheltered instruction practices based on the percentage of ell's but not on grade instructional design or preparedness the correlation analysis revealed there is a positive correlation between preparedness and sheltered practices the study revealed that while teachers are using strategies that make content lessons accessible and comprehensible to ell's they are often not specifically addressing the academic language development of their students it is recommended that districts provide teachers with professional development opportunities that specifically address second language acquisition and practical ways to develop academic language across the content areas
